

Auditory brainstem response (ABR): The processing of auditory information through subcortical nuclei can be traced through the seven waves of seen in EEG recordings within the first 12 ms after sound onset. The clinical ABR test indicates whether auditory information reaches subcortical areas and can be used with young infant and other populations that are difficult to test.