

Barker hypothesis: The hypothesis is that what happens during prenatal development (e.g., mother's poor nutrition) has a direct impact on long-term health and disease (e.g., cardiovascular disease, diabetes, etc.) in postnatal life.