

Conditioned head turn: A method of testing whether infants can discriminate two sounds or two categories of sound. Infants are trained to turn their head to the location of the speaker on their left when there is a change in a repeating train of sounds. The head turn behaviour is conditioned by rewarding infants with a couple of seconds of an animated toy for turning when the sound changes. No reward is given for turns when there is no change.