

Right anterior insula: The insula is a cerebral cortex structure found between the temporal lobe and the frontal lobe. It is believed to be the seat of human awareness (e.g. being able to time one's own heart beat is due to the right anterior insula) and plays an important role in positive and negative emotions.