

Limbic dysfunction: The limbic system is a group of areas of the brain known to play a role in olfaction, memory and regulation of the emotional response. Disruption of this system, especially following stress, results in behavioural problems, such as memory problems or emotional problems.